JWU CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL WITH FIREWORKS

KYLE BRENNAN // CAMPUS HERALD

To kick off the new school year, Student Involvement & Leadership hosted the Centennial Fireworks Celebration on Sept. 28. Students sat along the bay on the Harborside Campus to watch the show, which started at 9:30 p.m. SGA and UIB handed out free hot chocolate on a table on the Scotts

Miracle-Gro Athletic Complex. UIB's Graphics and Marketing Coordinator Jake Kottke, said, "I liked that we got to see all of the student's excitement about getting free hot chocolate and the fireworks they were all anxiously awaiting."

Hear the roar: JWU's new radio station soon to launch

Bradly J. VanDerStad
I&O and A&E Editor

Dec. 5, 2014 is the day that JWU Live, the university's new radio station, will be on the web.

That's James Amaral's vision, anyway. Administration has told Amaral that this is optimistic, and is shooting for spring term.

Amaral is the current president of the Broadcasting Club and the station manager. "After 100 years and four campuses, it's a long time coming," he said. He, Arden Antes, the vice president and assistant station manager, and Dr. Christopher Westgate, the faculty advisor, have been working hard to see this new club established and make it prosper.

The radio station will be a completely student-run entity, with little to no assistance from administration. It will also be a non-traditional station because it will exist solely through the internet and in app form. "By tapping into this ever-expanding medium, we believe that JWU Live will be a sure success," Amaral said. There will be an application and audition process for student-proposed program ideas. The station will operate out of the first floor of the CBCSI building in the former production room.

When asked about the biggest obstacle to success, Amaral said it was anticipated to be financial, but so far there hasn't been trouble getting the neces-

Kennedy Plaza renovations underway

Bradly J. VanDerStad
I&O and A&E Editor

At the Community Meeting held at the Providence Foundation on Sept. 23, Amy Pettine of the planning department at RIPA shed light on the upcoming renovations to Kennedy Plaza, due to be finished in late fall—and there are many.

Pettine said that the changes to the civic space were based partially on the results of a rider survey, which asked how the Kennedy Plaza experience could be better. The results indicated that riders had concerns about limited seating at the station, limited shelter from the elements, general safety, and overcrowding. Other complaints included that there were too many lanes of dangerous traffic, the area was dirty, and that smoke from cigarettes was offensive.

Pettine said that the planning department made sure that the City of Providence, who owns the space, took each of these into account. In the new Kennedy Plaza, at every bus berth (stop), there will be three-sided shelters to protect from the wind. There will be 40-foot benches installed in order to address the seating scarcity. There will also be more signage in order to make bus travel less confusing.

There will be a total of 15 berths in the area in total—five on each side of the plaza, two on East Approach (trolley stop area), and three on Exchange Terrace, which in the coming year will

Nations prepare for Ebola

Bethany Davis
Staff Writer

Nations around the world are preparing to handle Ebola, a disease that has taken over 3,000 lives in West Africa, according to the World Health Organization (WHO).

WHO says that as long as hospitals follow proper protocol the spread of Ebola should not be a problem. There have been strict protocols put in place that all doctors and missionaries that were working in infected countries must have medical exams before they leave Africa and also when they get back to the United States. There has also been an alert sent out to healthcare providers so they are able to recognize the symptoms of Ebola and when to test for it.

According to CIDRAP News, the U.S. doctor that was infected with Ebola virus was brought to Atlanta on Aug. 2 and is receiving treatment at Emory Hospital. The other doctor that was infected arrived in the hospital on Aug. 3 to receive the same treatment. Both of the doctors were treated with experimental drugs while in Liberia. The doctors are expected to make a full recovery.

infected countries collapsed in a London airport and later died; after testing, it was confirmed that she did not have Ebola. This incident did cause a health scare in London and the rest of Europe as well. The European Center for Disease Prevention and Control assures citizens that the risk of Europeans contracting Ebola is very low unless they came in contact with bodily fluids of an infected person. BBC reported that this is the largest Ebola outbreak in history and some seven-hundred new cases were reported in one week. As many as 20,000 people could be infected. World organizations are coming together to do the only thing they are able to do: contain the Ebola virus.

turn into a two-way street. Both directions of the R-Line will be closest to the Kennedy Plaza Intermodal Transportation Center, and city routes will be close to the plaza to make transfers easier.

There are also plans to build an accessible, well-lit path from the corner on Burnside Park (where Exchange street and Exchange Terrace meet) to Kennedy Plaza, in an attempt to make the space safer and to incorporate the park into the space more effectively.

While there are fewer bus berths, there will be the same amount of bus service; RIPTA will simply operate more efficiently with its space.

Pettine also announced that there will be better signage, including illuminated berth markers and signs that countdown to when the next bus is arriving using GPS tracking. There will also be a larger effort to make "no smoking" signs more visible, as it is illegal to do so in bus stop areas. RIPTA is also pushing for an ordinance that will ban smoking from public parks, which will include Kennedy Plaza.

Additionally, RIPTA is a looking to have self-service terminals in the plaza, and to implement a reloadable ticket system, much like Boston's Charlie Card system.

As for the Greyhound, Bonanza, and Peter Pan bus lines, they will most likely be relocated to the Providence Amtrak Station, but nothing has been officially established.

Because RIPTA carried 20 million rides last year and is still expanding, it may one day seek to have more transit centers outside of downtown Providence, but the scope of those is yet to be determined.

SGA meeting with police addresses concerns in the PC area

Major Thomas Verdi addresses concerns with Providence College area at SGA meeting.

Editor-in-Chief

On Sept. 23, SGA was joined by the Providence Police Department and guests from the JWU community. According to SGA's meeting notes, provided by Secretary Karl Uzcategui, Major Michael Quinn of Campus Safety & Security opened the floor. He introduced the Providence Police Department, represented by Major Thomas Verdi.

Verdi, along with members of JWU administration, addressed concerns about the Providence College area. Large social gatherings, noise disturbances, and poor interactions with neighbors are among issues in the area in recent years. Verdi said that out of 26 recent disturbances, seven were houses that JWU students lived in. Two arrests out of 22 involved JWU students.

The "orange sticker" policy was discussed as well. As declared by the "Party House" Ordinance, when the police abate a public nuisance, they will post a notice on that property for six months. If there is another incident of public nuisance, the police will issue a $500 fine.

The Speaker of the Senate, Ashley Fudala, found the presentation "very informative. It gave us the perspective of the Providence natives," she said. "Also it really informed me that Providence Police are working with all Providence schools, not just JWU."

The senators, as well as representatives from Greek life and athletics, plan to spread what they learned at the meeting to their organizations and peers.

sary funding. "Equipment will need to be purchased along with various music delivery services," he said, "but while the initial investment may prove comparably larger than our projected annual overhead costs following startup, we have worked with every level of administration to ensure that, while providing quality programming, we also remain cost effective for the university. With the help of Scott Lyons and Jessica Grady, we have essentially broken through any wall that would hold us back."

Amaral has some experience in this field. At the age of 16, he assisted in founding Troy City Radio in Fall River, Mass. "A lot of what's going into the station is modeled off of my experience with them," he said.

"JWU Live is your radio station," Amaral said. "It is exactly what you make it. We are always looking for members to help behind the scenes. We have great plans for this station, but we need you, members."

Oscar Pistorius: An unmistakable murder

Jasmine Turner
Staff Writer

Two years ago, the world looked to Oscar Pistorius as a symbol of hope. He broke through the belief that handicapped athletes are inferior in the world of sports by becoming the first amputee athlete to compete in the Olympics. Today, Oscar is being questioned on whether or not he slaughtered his girlfriend of four months.

On Nov. 22, 1986, the Johannesburg South African Native was born to Sheila and Henk Pistorius. His experiences as a child are wrought with pain and tragedy. Living without fibulas, his parents made the difficult decision to amputate his legs below the knee when Pistorius was just 11 months old. Refusing to succumb to the restrictions his prosthetic legs allotted him, Oscar was walking within six months, foreshadowing a successful career in sports. 26 years later, he's facing the next biggest race of his life. So what really happened the night Reeva Steenkamp was murdered in her own home?

On Valentine's Day, around 3 a.m., Pistorius was sleeping in bed next to Steenkamp preceding the gruesome killing. According to Oscar's affidavit published on Slate.com, the events of that tragic night are as follows: "I heard a noise in the bathroom and realized that someone was in the bathroom... I was too scared to switch a light on. I grabbed my 9mm pistol from underneath my bed."

"...grabbed my 9mm pistol from underneath my bed." Really? So that means he crawled around his bed where a sleeping Reeva would have been positioned in open view, if an intruder actually broke in. Along with the fact that Pistorius lives in a hyper-secure community that utilizes laser sensors and biometric locks, at last week's bail hearing, a police officer testified that there were two dogs outside the window that Pistorius believed an intruder entered through. With this much fear of an intruder, it gave the prosecutor pause that Oscar would sleep with his balcony doors wide open. Oscar continued: "On my way to the bathroom I screamed words to the effect for him/them to get out of my house and for Reeva to phone the police. It was pitch dark in the bedroom and I thought Reeva was in bed."

He noticed that the bathroom window was open and that the intruder was in the toilet: "I fired shots at the toilet door and shouted to Reeva to phone the police." The real bewilderment enters the equation when Pistorius travels 35 feet down the hall and around the corner (without prosthetics) towards the loud noises that scared him enough to previously refuse turning on any lights. According to the Slate.com, Pistorius' bedroom is "16 feet wide, with a couch to the side of the bed... Imagine trying to maneuver around that bed in total darkness, rapidly and on stumps, without bumping into it or waking Steenkamp."

The obvious assumption of any loving partner is that if noises are originating from the bathroom in the early morning, it's your mate relieving herself and if that's not common sense, going to the bed to confirm the suspicion rather than reaching for a gun is a sense only common to the sane.

The prosecutor, Gerrie Nel, proved only enough for the judge to find Oscar Pistorius guilty of culpable homicide over the expected and well-deserved sentence of murder; "culpable" representing his responsibility, but not motive to kill. "As he stands right now, he's free [to compete]," South African Sports Confederations and Olympics Committee Chief Executive Tubby Reddy told the Associated Press on Monday, Sept. 15," according to CBCSports.com. Pistorius potentially faces years in jail, however there is no minimum sentence for this conviction in South African law, and Pistorius could receive a suspended sentence resulting in no jail time at all (CBCSports.com).

Unfortunately, the man who broke barriers for athletes around the world has also turned out to be the "culpable" killer in one of the most controversial cases of the century. Since diving into the mind of Oscar is not a possibility, the night of the murder can only be speculated and gossiped about. Nevertheless, the former hero slayed his own reputation when firing those three shots into the door. Presented with the facts of the case, the trial has gone sour, adding to the curdling concoction of murderers being released back into society deemed 'not guilty.' We can only hope that in future trials, a defendant is not discharged on the basis of misconception, and is found guilty when he murders an innocent victim.

ISIS America's greatest threat

Nico Terrett
Staff Writer

Decapitations, mass murder, mass rape, kidnapping, extortion, and robbery are a few crimes committed by the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS). ISIS is a recently emerging but long-time terrorist group operating out of the Middle East. Originally part of Al Qaeda, this group splintered off into something so extreme that Al Qaeda no longer affiliates with them. The group now stands at 31,500 hundred fighters strong, is made up of 74 different countries and includes 2,000 Westerners, 100 of which are from America, according to CNN. This terrorist organization is currently in control of 35,000 square miles stretching from Syria to the outskirts of Baghdad, Iraq.

According to Breitbart News Network, the organization has a net worth of two billion dollars and is in control of enough oil fields to produce over 75,000 barrels of oil a day. This is an organization that is responsible for multiple mass executions and mass rapes across the territory they control. They claim to have no borders and want to be one nation under Sharia law. Its most recent acts of violence have been directed towards the United States and the United Kingdom, through the beheadings of two American journalists, James Foley and Steven Sotloff, and most recently a British aid worker in the Middle East, David Haines, CNN says.

It's time for the United States and its allies to stand up to the danger that is ISIS. It is the best funded, most organized, and most brutal terrorist origination in history. I disagree with President Obama's three-point plan of handling this threat—in short, he is enlisting other countries around the world and in the Middle East to stand and fight against ISIS, with support from the United States via equipment and air strikes, CNN reported. What the United States needs to do is bring back an invading force in Iraq and begin fighting ISIS on the ground, along with the help of other countries and with heavy utilization of weapons such as drone attacks and air strikes. Unlike the current fight against terror we have been fighting for 13 years, we are dealing with an enemy that is organized—a fight that the United States should be able to handle. Every day that ISIS is left to plot is another day closer to events like those on 9/11, thirteen years ago. Unlike then, we now have a clear and present danger we are facing, with the means to handle it.

New England's best fall tradition – The Big E

Gabrielle Wilson
Staff Writer

As a born and raised New Englander, I look forward to mid-September every year. Other than the cooler weather and changing leaves, the best part is the state fair to end all state fairs: The Big E.

Here's a brief summary for anyone who has never had the experience: The Big E, or the Eastern States Exposition, is a 17-day long fair held in Springfield, Mass. The fair showcases the best of the New England states, with a house dedicated to each one, and has all different sorts of activities: a midway, craft sellers, concerts, and most importantly, food. A whole lot of food.

The only reason why I make the trudge every year through horrendous traffic is for the delicious tastes scattered around the fairgrounds. The Big E combines the two best food types: carnival food (aka, fried everything) and New England delicacies. While walking around and stuffing my face, I decided to highlight some of the best options.

The first stop I think everyone should make at The Big E is to the state houses, where each of the six New England states showcases their claims to fame. The New Hampshire house offers fresh corn on the cob, cooked right in the husk and dunked in melted butter. It's so good that they even made a giant corn cob out of milk jugs!

It's pretty common knowledge that Maine has some of the best seafood ever, and if you can't regularly make it up north to get some, The Big E is the next best place. My personal favorites are the smoked salmon, which is a flavorful whole filet served on a stick, and the lobster rolls, which speak for themselves in terms of taste. If you're looking for a little more starch in your life, there's also the famous Maine baked potatoes, which are piled high with all the good things in life (namely, bacon).

My favorite booth in the entire complex is settled in the Vermont house, and that is the Cold Hollow Cider Mill. If you're an apple lover, this is your dream. Their apple cider donuts look plain, but taste out of this world. In addition, they also have apple cider, apple pie, and apple crisp. I frequently get donuts continuously throughout the day because they're just that good.

Because we live in Rhode Island, I can't forget to mention our house! It may be small, but it's packed with plenty of delicious seafood, Rhode Island Johnny-cakes, and of course, Del's Lemonade.

Other great fair food options are fried cheesecake (or really, anything with the word 'fried' in front of it), the famous Big E cream puffs and éclairs, and a smoked turkey leg the size of your head. I'm just not responsible if you end up having a heart attack.

Sadly, The Big E is finishing up its yearly run this weekend, but I'm already gearing up for 2015. If you enjoy food or New England traditions, The Big E shouldn't leave you disappointed.

Secret menu craze makes its way to Starbucks

Danielle DuPont
Staff Writer

The internet is buzzing with talks of some of America's favorite restaurants having "secret menus." Restaurants like McDonald's, In N' Out, and Chipotle Mexican Grill are known to make special request menu items that have been cooked up mostly by frequent customers to these eateries. One restaurant frequented by Johnson & Wales University students that has a secret menu is Starbucks. Many JWU students use their meal swipes at this famous coffee shop located in the Harborside Academic Center and Johnson Hall. But having the same vanilla skinny latte every day can get a little boring after a while. Listed below are four secret menu recipes that every JWU student can use when they want to spice up their Starbucks drink order.

1. To achieve a rich, chocolate drink perfect for the upcoming season, try this sweet and spicy recipe for Mexican Hot Chocolate.

What to order: A hot chocolate made w/ soy milk (no water)
-Add mocha syrup (1 pump tall, 1.5 grande, 2 venti)
-Add white mocha syrup (1 pump tall, 1.5 grande, 2 venti)
-Add cinnamon dolce syrup (2 pumps tall, 3 grande, 4 venti)
-Ask for cinnamon powder to be added to milk while it's steamed

2. Modeled after a fall staple, this cool and refreshing recipe for a Pumpkin Pie Frappuccino is creamy and sweet. It is sure to get you in the mood for Thanksgiving.

What to order: A crème based Pumpkin Spice Frappuccino
-Add cinnamon dolce syrup (1 pump for a tall, 2 for grande, 3 for venti)
-Add cinnamon dolce sprinkles
-Whipped cream blended in

-Top with more whipped cream and cinnamon dolce sprinkles

3. Prized by the characters in the Harry Potter series, Butterbeer is said to have a smooth, creamy, and sweet flavor, similar to the inside of a Heath candy bar. This recipe for a Hot Butterbeer Latte gives you a classic latte flavor with a twist of Hogsmeade richness.

What to order: A whole milk steamer

-Add caramel syrup (2 pumps for tall, 3 for grande, 4 for venti)

-Add toffee nut syrup (2 pumps for tall, 3 for grande, 4 for venti)

-Add cinnamon dolce syrup (2 pumps for tall, 3 for grande, 4 for venti)

-Whipped cream and salted caramel bits on top (or crème brûlée topping if you prefer.

4. Pixie Stix are a relic of 90's candy aisles and this refresher will be sure to bring you back to that paper tube with colorful sugar inside. The Pixie Stix Refresher is sugary and tart and is great for customers wanting a blast of sweetness:

What to order: half Passion Tea and half Valencia Orange Refresher

-No water

-No orange slices

-Add classic syrup (2 pumps for a tall, 2 for a grande, 3 for a venti)

-Add raspberry syrup (1 pump for a tall, 2 for a grande, 3 for a venti)

Many more recipes from the Starbucks secret menu can be found on websites like Pinterest. You can even check out the unofficial Starbucks secret menu website, StarbucksSecretMenu.net. Out of these four concoctions, I would most likely recommend the Mexican Hot Chocolate. It was so rich and full of chocolate flavor, while also having a spicy twist. It will be perfect to warm you up on a cold day walking around campus.

Movie Review: As Above So Below

Will Paris
Staff Writer

"The only way out, is down." This is the tagline for John Erick Dowdle's new horror-thriller, As Above So Below. This film follows young alchemy scholar Scarlett Marlowe (Perdita Weeks) as she tries to finish her dead father's work and searches for the fabled Philosopher's Stone. This hunt leads her and her cameraman Benji (Edwin Hodge) to Paris where she meets up with her friend George (Ben Feldman). This group deduces that the stone is located in the Paris Catacombs, so the team adventures under The City of Love and into a city of the dead to find the Philosopher's Stone.

As Above So Below follows

the same cliché storytelling as many of today's horror movies. This movie is completely predictable to the point where I was able to guess who would live, who would die, and which order they would die in. The cast of characters in this movie, besides Scarlett Marlowe, are pretty bland and boring. Whether they survive a life-threatening event or die from said event, you don't care one bit. As Above So Below starts out slow, has a short point where it really grabs your attention, then loses it again in 20 minutes.

Some positives about this movie would be the imagery and camera work. I'm a big fan of the found footage style of horror movies; unlike many people I love the Paranormal Activity series. This movie really delivers when it comes to camera shots. Multiple characters are wearing cameras on their head, and the view switches between them throughout the catacombs. This gives the movie a very creepy tone, but it does not capitalize on this. Instead, it resorts to using cliché and predictable jumpscare.

The best part about this movie was the atmosphere and the acting by Perdita Weeks. Of all the acting in this movie, her performance was very well done. Her scenes were believable and entertaining.

As Above So Below had the potential to be a great horror movie but instead fell into being just mediocre. I wouldn't spend the money to see this flick in theaters—wait until it's on TV. I give it a 5.5 out of 10.

It's a dark place in the late night hours where you realize you have fallen into a continuing cycle of Youtube video after Youtube video. The suggestion column ensnares you into yet another 3 minutes of mindless watching until you completely forget where you started and the pile of unfinished homework goes completely neglected.

On that night's edition of "Internet Rabbit Hole," near 2 a.m., I found myself at a channel called "In Bed with Joan." It was a web talk show starring Joan Rivers and a guest lounging in bed, just chatting about life. I had viewed a handful of these videos and listened as she interviewed singers, TV personas and stand-up comics. I thought to myself how this Joan Rivers on my computer screen was much different than the one that I thought I knew. I had always perceived Joan as a mean, merciless woman with an excessive amount of plastic surgery, but here, she was thoughtful, subtly funny, and genuinely interested in what the other person had to say. Over the next couple of days, I laughed along to about 50 episodes of her show. I was suddenly infatuated with 81-year-old Joan Rivers.

Weeks later, it was reported that Joan had been hospitalized after a routine throat surgery went awry and left her unable to breathe. One week after, on Sept. 4, she died. Celebrities were left heartbroken and grieving over social media. Lena Dunham, who was often the punch line of some of Joan's harshest jokes, posted to twitter, "All love and healing wishes to Her Majesty Joan Rivers: being ripped a new one by you is an honor to be treasured." Joan Rivers was more than just ripping celebrities new ones based on what they wore to award shows; her career was much more vast than that.

As a young woman, Joan wanted desperately to be an actress, yet found she was much better at stand-up comedy. She got her big break in 1965 on The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson. That first show, Johnny told her on the air that he predicted that she would become "a big star." She and Johnny became close friends. She was a guest on his show many times, and guest hosted for him as well.

Joan knew no boundaries. She was fearless. Her act featured many jokes centered on womanhood and the difficulties of being a lady of the 60s. In her 2010 documentary Joan Rivers: A Piece of Work, I watched clips of her old acts, including a joke about a woman who had a large number of abortions prior to finding a husband and settling down. Abortions! A woman publicly joking about abortion! Back then it was completely unheard of. Joan remembered her manager calling her and telling her "You're going into places you shouldn't go. It's not right. Women shouldn't talk about that." She responded, "You are so wrong. This is exactly what we should be talking about."

Joan brought feminine issues to light through jokes on primetime television, and that raw truthfulness to her comedy is what made her popular. Later on, Fox Network offered her her own late night talk show, and she jumped at her opportunity. When she called to tell the good news to Johnny Carson, he hung up the phone on her. He felt she had betrayed him. Johnny and Joan were in competition with each other, and as a punishment, Johnny had Joan black-listed from NBC. She did not appear on NBC again until recent years. Unfortunately for Joan, The Late Show starring Joan Rivers was unsuccessful and cancelled after one year.

This did not stop her; she kept writing books, starring in commercials and tv shows, and of course, doing stand-up comedy. Joan Rivers never quit. She was a pioneer for all funny women of the future. Without her tearing down the walls, we would never even have the chance to laugh at the outrageousness of comedienne like Sarah Silverman, Kathy Griffin, and Amy Schumer. We would never see shows like Girls or Broad City. Joan did not like being called a pioneer, though. She says in A Piece of Work, "If one more woman comedian comes up to me and says 'you opened the door for me' I wanna say 'go f*** yourself. I am still opening doors.'" Joan never once stopped doing what she loved, and worked hard until the end of her life.

A few months ago, during an interview to promote her book, a CNN anchorwoman started shooting negative accusations at Joan. She asked Joan if she was aware that she was a mean and offensive person. It was not the harsh words that offended Joan, but the fact that this woman did not understand her comedy in the slightest. Before storming out, Joan expressed words that have never been truer. She proclaimed, "Life is very tough and if you can make a joke to make something easier and funny, do it."

Thank you, Joan Rivers, for being the strong, sensational, tenacious, and funny woman that the world needed to break down the doors. Awards season will never be the same without you.

STREET STYLE

Alison Rugg
Columnist

Good afternoon Ladies and Gents,

I can't believe we are already four weeks into the school year - whoa! Just another gorgeous week to take a sneak peek inside the closets of our Johnson & Wales fashionistas/os on campus. This week I sat down with the special events coordinator of the International Fashion Society and senior, Kristina Skala. She gave me an idea of what the average stylish day looks like for her. When it came to explaining her personal style she described it as very feminine and figure flattering. "I like edgy feminine, clean and cute styles," she said. She expressed how much of an inspiration and impact her mom has been on her personal attire. "My mom taught me the importance of your appearance" Skala said. "She always looks amazing and well put together. You will never see my mom walk out of the house without heels on." Before the start of her freshman year at Johnson & Wales, Skala was pleased to win "best dressed" in her session of the First Year Experience program. Getting into more of the fashion aspect of it, I asked her what her favorite fall trend for this year would have to be. "Skirts, I'm obsessed. They're a big thing for me. I love throwing on a cute skirt to wear, cute tights, and a leather jacket over it," Skala explained. One thing this well-dressed fashionista cannot live without is lip gloss or lipstick. "It's just one of those things that I feel make you 'look better,' it brightens up your face. It's super girly, just like me." Skala's dream job would have to be working in New York City for a higher-end fashion company, working in their marketing department. If possible, she wants to do all of the traveling she possibly can. She also has a love for art and music; anytime she can go to a museum or an art exhibit she's there. One of her all-time favorite fashion quotes is from the well-renowned show Sex and the City, "I like my money where I can see it, hanging in my closet," spoken by the true words of character, Ms. Carrie Bradshaw. "I love seeing my closet filled with clothes. I could shop all day long, I never get sick of it," Skala said.

Seome fall fashion advice she would like to give for the average fashion lover on campus is to "wear what is comfortable and makes you feel good, and always put your best foot forward. You can be comfortable and still look good. In my opinion, even though UGGs are comfortable, they are not attractive. I don't believe they are meant to be worn with a cute outfit," she expressed. To all the readers out there... What are some of your favorite fall trends for this season? Let us know at Facebook.com/jwucampusherald.

Target has been nailing it with their recent collaborations. They have paired up with top fashion and interior designers, as well as some of the web's most beloved bloggers. So it comes at no surprise that Target and TOMS are collaborating together for the upcoming holiday season.

The TOMS and Target collection is said to hit stores in the U.S and Canada, as well as online, on November 16, 2014. There has been a lot of buzz about this collection, and for good reason. Target's online magazine, A Bullseye View, described how the upcoming collaboration will work to stay true to TOMS slogan, "One for one." In the United States, every TOMS for Target merchandise sold will mean that either one blanket will be donated to the American Red Cross or one week of meals will be donated to Feeding America. In Canada, either one blanket will be donated to the Canadian Red Cross or one week of meals will be donated to Food Banks Canada. While the above applies to TOMS clothing, home and accessory purchases, if a pair of TOMS shoes are bought, then a pair will be donated to a less fortunate child.

Target and TOMS will be offering over 50 products this holiday season, with everything in the collection priced under $50. The collection offers a wide variety of products including blankets, t-shirts, scarves, hats, and TOMS shoes. It is coming to stores and online just in time for the holiday gift giving season. According to Blake Mycoskie, TOMS Founder and Chief Shoe Giver, the pieces in the Target and TOMS partnership are functional and great gift ideas

New York Fashion Week Recap

Liz Gillis
Staff Writer

New York held its famous Mercedes-Benz Fashion Week from Sept. 4 to Sept. 11 this year. Did you miss it? Have no fear. Here is a list of what we should be seeing in stores in the spring of 2015, based on this year's show:

1. Bell bottom pants

This spring you're going to want to widen your pant collection. Say goodbye to just owning skinny jeans and yoga pants to make room for a pair of bell bottoms.

2. Fringe

It was all over the runways this fall. Whether it is subtle fringe trim on a jacket or dress, or a drastic fringe skirt, designers like Tory Burch and ProenzaSchouler are loving this trend for spring.

3. Gingham

According to life and style blogger Emily Schuman, this print "screams spring." Usually associated with picnic blankets, designers have transformed this print into a beautiful, feminine, and lovable print for you this spring.

4. Large prints

The classic floral and plaid prints will be getting enlarged for a fresh new take. Designers like Michael Kors, Carolina Herrera, and Suno supported this trend down the runway.

5. Unstructured and Oversized

Menswear turned into women's wear is no surprise on the runways. Especially this spring, expect to see unstructured coats and oversized vests hitting stores near you.

SEX HACKS

SEX, GENDER IDENTITY, AND GENDER EXPRESSION

Lukas Hawthorne
Staff Writer

Today, we're talking about gender. Sex, gender identity, gender expression: the whole shebang in a boiled down cup of essentials.

When one begins to look into gender identity, it becomes clear almost immediately that there is an infinite amount of possible labels. This is shown best by explaining that gender falls onto a spectrum. This spectrum doesn't necessarily go from "maleness" to "femaleness," but rather two parallel lines. A person is able to be any combination or fall entirely outside these two terms. Below, you'll find some key vocabulary in regards to gender identity.

* Gender/genderless: Not identifying with male, female, or any other gender. Often said to fall outside the gender binary.

* Androgyne/androgyny: The term has been commonly used to describe a fashion style in which it is difficult to tell whether the individual is any particular gender, or perhaps showing traits of multiple genders combined into one.

* Bigender: Identifying simultaneously as both female and male, perhaps more so one than the other, or equally. People using this identity label may describe themselves as fluctuating between two genders.

* Cisgender: Often shortened to "cis," meaning "same side," cisgender individuals are those whose gender identity matches up with their sex assigned at birth. This word is used as a prefix, as in "cis-female" or

"cis-male."

* FtM/trans-man: Men, who were assigned female at birth, but identify as male.

* Genderfluid/genderqueer: Trickier to define, but thought of by many as being a constantly shifting gender, or a combination. By nature, this term is difficult to describe in a generic sense, as it is very individualized.

* MtF/trans-woman: Women, who were assigned male at birth, but identify as female.

* Transgender: Often shortened to "trans," means someone whose gender differs from the one they were given when they were born. Transgender people may identify as male or female, or they may feel that neither label fits them. Oftentimes these individuals will take physical steps to align their presentation with an appearance more typical of their gender, though each individual's approach to this is unique.

* Gender binary: Not a gender identity, but a good phrase to know nonetheless. The gender binary is the belief that gender only comes in two flavors: male and female, with everyone falling on one end or the other.

* Gender Identity: The internal perception of an individual's gender, and how they label themselves.

* Gender pronouns/PGPs: The pronouns used to refer to a person. Some examples are she/her/hers, he/him/his, they/them/theirs, ze/zim/zes, ve/ver/vis, ze/hir/hir, ce/cir/cirs, the possibilities go on.

* Gender spectrum: The belief that gender is an ever-sliding spectrum with infinite possibilities, as opposed to the gender binary, listed above. Some models have "masculinity" on one end and "femininity" on the other, drawn out as one continuous bar. Others have parallel bars with the same trait meters. Diagrams of this are in constant change due to their nature.

The above list can be used as a primer on the most known terminology, but it must be remembered that this is a mere sampling of the spectrum. Along with there being many, many more labels than the ones written here, it is also important to know that most people have their own unique definitions for their chosen gender identity. Think of this as an outline.

"There are so many labels now, how do I know which gender pronouns to use?" If you find yourself wondering this, there's a pretty simple solution: ask! To many people, who may have never needed to ponder over their gender pronouns, it might feel like an odd question. However, to those who do prefer a certain set of pronouns, it can be reassuring. It opens the door for them to give their pronouns without having to make the potentially awkward opener. You can also make it a habit to give your own pronouns when introducing yourself, even if you think they should be obvious.

To learn more, come to our Genderbread Person Workshop, over at the BRIDGE Center on October 2 from 2.30-3.30. Feel free to pop by the Gender Equity Center and ask us a question.

With pleasure, Lukas Hawthorne, Ask! educator, and my pronouns are he/him/his, and they/them/theirs.

Ten things we learned this weekend in college football

Matt Murschel

Orlando Sentinel

(MCT)

No. 1 FSU struggled to win, one college coach lost his job and running backs are bumping quarterbacks out of the national spotlight.

They headline the list of top 10 things we learned during another action packed college football weekend.

1. This isn't the Florida State of last season. The Seminoles may be undefeated, but they sure don't look unbeatable. The defense is giving up twice as many points and total yards, while turnovers have put FSU on the wrong end of the scoreboard early in games. And yet the 'Noles continue to find ways to survive.

2. The SEC West is about to get real. We're about to find out who the best teams are in the toughest division in college football. Six ranked teams are set to face off against each other next week, including Texas A&M at Mississippi State, Alabama at Ole Miss and LSU at Auburn.

3. Texas A&M is much more than just offense. The knock on Kevin Sumlin's program has been it's all offensive flash and no defensive substance. That's changed this season, with the Aggies stopping teams late, allowing just 27 second-half points in five games.

4. The SEC East is still a mess. The SEC East continues to be anyone's guess right now. Missouri's loss to Indiana last week had everyone writing off the Tigers, but a come-from-behind win over South Carolina on the road makes Mizzou the favorite heading into next week's battle with Georgia.

5. Is this the year of the running back? Quarterbacks have hogged the national spotlight, but that's about to change thanks to Georgia's Todd Gurley, Wisconsin's Melvin Gordon and Nebraska's Ameer Abdullah. The trio rushed for a combined 597 yards and seven touchdowns in big wins during the weekend.

6. The Charlie Weis Era ends with a thud in Kansas. Weis was supposed to be the big name hire who was going to put the Jayhawks back on the map, but instead the program got lost along the way to the tune of a 6-22 overall record. Kansas fired Weis Sunday, with school officials citing "lack of on-field development."

7. Brady Hoke may not be far behind. Michigan's loss to Minnesota may not have sealed his fate, but his decision to allow quarterback Shane Morris to return to the game after being carted off the field with a possible concussion didn't help his cause. The move was immediately questioned by critics and Hoke had no good answers.

8. Michigan State and Ohio State continue to make their case. Week 2 losses by these two powers had many knocking the Big Ten out of the four-team College Football Playoff race. The schools will need to build on big offensive showings they delivered during the weekend to impress playoff selection committee members.

9. Is Notre Dame a playoff contender? The Fighting Irish may be 4-0, but their body of work isn't the most impressive, especially as Michigan continues its downward spiral. Some pundits see this team a legitimate contender, but we'll see if that's the case after showdowns with Stanford and FSU.

10. UCLA is scary when the Bruins are running on all cylinders. For weeks now, we've wondered what is up with UCLA after single-digit wins over Virginia, Memphis and Texas. But Thursday's night's 62-27 rout over Arizona State was a masterpiece for Jim Mora and company. The Bruins went on an impressive 52-10 run that put the game out of reach for the Sun Devils.

NFL Controversy

Bethany Davis

Staff Writer

Most of us like to sit down on the couch with a bowl of chips and watch a nice NFL game on Sunday night. Lately though, the NFL has offered more controversy than fun with its suspension policy on domestic violence. According to ProFootballTalk, Commissioner Roger Goodell claimed that he made a mistake by only giving Ray Rice a two-day suspension for the charge of domestic violence. Ray Rice had reportedly struck his fiancée in February, and when the NFL found out about this, they originally suspended him for two days.

However, when a video was leaked, Ray's suspension was extended indefinitely. According to NBC News, over 10 players have domestic violence on their records and some have served their punishments while others have fought back. The NFL is trying to correct the way that they handle the domestic violence, but many are still upset with the way they are handling the situation.

According to YahooSports, the NFL has appointed a board of white women to oversee the new policies on domestic violence. This seems to present some problems among the NFL considering the majority of the teams are black and many think that the white women will not be able to understand the culture of the players. There is still debate on how to go about dealing with the other players' infractions, but they have taken a step by suspending Rice indefinitely.

Apple unveils latest iPhone products

Jennifer Stratton
Staff Writer

At a recent announcement event at their California headquarters, Apple unveiled their latest iPhone products: the iPhone 6 and the iPhone 6 Plus.

These new devices offer better display and photo quality, more storage space, and a new payment system called Apple Pay. The iPhone 6 and 6 Plus offer up to 128 GB of storage within the device, while the previous version of the phone, the iPhone 5s, held a significantly less amount of storage space of 32 GB.

The size of the new displays seem to be taking a hint from the makers of the similarly popular Samsung Galaxy phones. While the iPhone 5s is only a mere 4 inches diagonally across the screen, the iPhone 6 extends 4.7 inches and the iPhone 6 plus reaches a grand 5.5 inches from corner to corner.

Samsung released an ad in response to Apple's new products, adding fire to the omnipresent Android vs. iPhone debate. In the one minute ad, Samsung jokes about how they were the first to release a larger phone, which was the size of the iPhone 6 Plus. The commercial was also released in anticipation for the latest edition of the Samsung Galaxy series, the Samsung Galaxy Note 4.

The iPhone 6 and iPhone 6 Plus, though not much different in appearance (besides size), have some varying qualities between them. The iPhone 6 Plus is said to have better image stabilization and photo quality than the regular iPhone 6, as well as a longer battery life. The iPhone 6 will cost $199 while the iPhone 6 Plus will run at $299.

This is the third iPhone upgrade unveiling since the death of Apple's co-founder, Steve Jobs. The phone has been open for preorder since last Friday and has caused some delay already. According to the CNN, the anticipation for the iPhone 6 and 6 Plus is so intense that the website crashed the day the phone went up for preorder. The iPhone 6 Plus is already sold out completely. According to Apple, the iPhone 6 Plus will not be available online for a few weeks. The phones went on sale in stores Friday, Sept. 19.

iPhone 6 and 6 Plus

Apple announced two new iPhones Tuesday, each with larger, higher resolution screens than previous iterations. The phones will hit stores Sept. 19, and start at $199 for the iPhone 6 and $299 for the 6 Plus.

The top 11 (hidden) features of iOS 8

Zachary Krase
Staff Writer

Have you made enough space yet on your iOS Device for the new software update? The new iOS software is Apple's biggest software update to date. The new OS will bring tons of new features such as third party keyboards, enhancements to notifications, better group functions, and Siri enhancements. With over 200 new features, how could you possibly keep up with all of them? Here's the top ten hidden features found within iOS 8 that you may not know about.

1. Messages Enhancements: Within the messaging app, Apple has added some of its competitors' features into its own messaging app. Things like Snapchat's self-destructing photos and videos, WhatsApp's many group message features, and some audio sending messages will now be available to iPhone users by default.

2. Hide Those Private Photos: Got some crazy college life photos on your phone you don't want anyone to know exist but yourself? In iOS 8, you can now hide photos within the photo app by holding down on a photo and clicking the "Hide" icon that appears. The photo will only be seen within the album that it is set to.

3. "Hey Siri" and Shazam Integration: Siri has gained some serious enhancements such as integration with song-recognizing company Shazam. You can now ask Siri "what song is this?" and she will start listening to the song playing. Every song Siri shows you is found under your "Lists Section" in the iTunes App.

4. Interactive Notifications (Quick Reply): Another very welcomed feature that you may not notice is the ability to interact with notifications when you first receive them, such as iMessage notifications. You can now reply to the text from anywhere by just pulling down on the notification when it first appears at the top of your screen. Third party apps are able to take advantage of this as well, such as Twitter, which has added the ability to reply to a tweet when pulling down on the notification you receive.

5. Personalized Share Sheets: Sharing could not be any easier than it is now in iOS 8. Now your favorite app developers can add parts of their app within Safari, Photo, and much more with what Apple calls "App Extensions." You can edit a photo with filters from another app right within the photo app without ever having to leave. Just add the app extension by going into the share sheet (the little box with an arrow pointing upwards) and then add any apps of yours that you'll use the extension for.

6. Create an Empty Home Screen: Maybe you have that amazing background photo that you wish you could look at once in a while without having all those apps blocking your view. Well you can now move over all your app icons over one page to the right to give you that background image without being obstructed by your Applications.

7. Battery Hogs: Battery seem to be dying to fast on you? Check under the settings app for the battery usage and see which applications are using up the most amount of your battery energy to try and reserve some battery consumption.

8. Gray Scale Mode: Under the Accessibility section of the settings app, a new all-gray mode has been added to allow you to go without any color if you feel like it. This may help the battery life last a little bit longer during the day if used.

9. Scan Credit Card Information: Sometimes you don't really feel like taking the time to enter in that whole Credit Card number to purchase that one cute iPhone case you found online. In iOS 8, when adding your Credit Card number, you can click the new "Scan Credit Card" button to take a quick snap of the information on your card to make checkout a little quicker.

10. Recover Deleted Photos: Remember that one photo you deleted and said "no, wrong one"? Now you have 30 days to recover that photo in the photos app under the section marked "Recently Deleted."

11. Emergency Medical Card: Within the new Health App is the ability to create an Emergency Medical Card for people to view in case of an emergency. They do not need your passcode to your phone; they can view it right from the lock screen under the emergency call section.
